The longest-running international journal on the comparative theory
and practice of formal and non-formal education

International Review of Education

Stephen Roche (Ed.)

The International Review of Education (IRE), first published in 1955, is the longest-running international journal on comparative theory and practice of formal and non-formal education. IRE serves the needs of educational researchers, teacher-training institutions, educational policy-makers and planners and other professionals throughout the world by providing scholarly information on major educational innovations, research projects and trends worldwide. The journal is currently in an exciting phase of its own growth. While maintaining its broad scope and academic rigour, it now addresses policy, research and practice in lifelong learning.

Edited by the UNESCO Institute for Lifelong Learning in Hamburg, IRE particularly encourages submissions from or focusing on countries which are usually least represented in academic journals. General editions contain articles on a wide variety of educational topics as well as book reviews. Special editions, guest-edited by distinguished educationists, are devoted to themes of particularly contemporary relevance. Contributions are published in English, French, Spanish or German.
